Fall/Winter 2006

Celebrating Two Decades of the LAJM

The LAJM has come a long way since its inception over twenty years ago. Editors have changed; issues have evolved. What hasn't changed is the commitment of the editors and contributors, and the entire membership of the Michigan Council of Teachers of English to produce a top-quality journal that compares favorably with journals across the country.

Fall/Winter 2006 is a special issue dedicated to celebrating the outstanding history and continued development of the LAJM into the twenty-first century by bringing together the 'best of' the LAJM since its inception, including reprints of outstanding articles from each editorial era of the journal, and commentaries on each era by our guest editors.

Guest Editors:

Elizabeth Brockman, Central Michigan University

John Dinan, Central Michigan University

Laura Renzi, Central Michigan University

Susan Steffel, Central Michigan University

Technology and the Teaching of English Language Arts

With rapid turnover of hardware and software and the continual development of new technologies and pedagogies to enact those technologies, there is always room for another issue dedicated to technology.

For this issue, we seek articles that

Discuss new ideas for using new technologies in classrooms

Consider how to integrate new means of communication and genres into teaching writing and literature, including Podcasting, digital storytelling, blogging, and others.

Consider the history of English language arts and look at various technologies over the ages and how those technologies affected teaching and teacher knowledge.

Anything of value that adds to our field's collective knowledge of ways to interact with and develop our teaching in an era of technological innovations.
