Call for Papers

Our Winter 1998 issue will reserve a special section for pieces on academic collaboration. There will be an interview with Richard Joannis (Sociology) and David Bernstein (Psychology) concerning a collaborative teaching project of theirs. Another piece will feature a transcript of remarks on writing and screen-writing by Patrick Duncan during his visit to campus last winter. Other writing to be included in the next issue will be a translation of the Hymn to Demeter by Diane Rayor (English) and a talk presented by artist Kathy Muehleman to the Grand Valley Classical Forum. If you have worked on a collaborative project with other faculty, staff, or students, we would like to hear from you.

Plans for special sections in future issues call for a Fall 1998 focus on Technology, and a Winter 1999 focus on responses to the Women's Commission or perhaps a section on the Women Scholars Faculty Forum. Another special section in a future issue may focus on grade inflation and academic standards at GVSU. We welcome your personal tales of woe or exhilaration as you have worked with technology, your thoughts on electronic media and communication, and your articles on including technology as part of your pedagogy.

Deadline for the Winter 1998 issue will be January 9. Please submit articles, poems, personal essays, fiction, or art to the Editor, 164 LHH. A diskette (in MS Word) along with the hard copy is much appreciated.
