Herringbone

by Kevin Griffith

A fatherless moon radiates intelligence onto the city block.
The snow becomes smooth tuxedo,
the street, lapel.
Knowing he has just kissed his Russian dancer a final goodbye, a man, resembling Bogart, is so heartbroken he can not see color.
Against the curb is a car no darker than litotes.
He slips into the car and reminisces about 100 torsoless women and a crayon sketch of the Venus de Milo with wings.
He rests his head on the steering wheel and cries tears the color of patent leather shoes.
