From the Editor

Myrna Webb

The 1990-91 school year is underway and hopefully all of our readers are well rested as we continue to provide educational growth opportunities for students. It is our hope that this issue of the MRA Journal will provide you with information that will be helpful to you in your classroom.

Many authors from throughout the state have submitted articles for publication and you will find many of them in this issue. Included are two "Whole Language" articles, two articles on assessment, two strategy pieces and a report from Susan L. Gabel on her experiences at the World Congress on Reading. Also included in this MRA

Journal is a report on "The State of Reading: A Profile of Michigan's Reading Professoriate." This is the second article in a series which investigate the influences and impact of changing theories, definitions, and practices in reading. This project is funded by the Michigan Reading Association and the results should be of interest to educators.

I once again would like to thank Marcia Cameron, Assistant Editor, for her many efforts in the publication of the Michigan Reading Journal.
