From This Beginning

With this first issue, the Michigan Reading Journal has become a reality. Its purpose, as proclaimed on its masthead, is the "dissemination of information to improve the teaching of reading". Like its parent, the Michigan Reading Association, the Journal is the visible expression of the interest of hundreds of educators in promoting better reading.

As a regular publication of the MRA, the Journal will provide teachers and administrators with a means of sharing ideas and research, a forum for discussing issues, and a billboard for announcing professional activities. Manuscripts dealing with any aspect of reading, letters to the editor, and news of the programs of local councils are most welcome, and will be carefully considered for inclusion by the editorial advisory board. Deadlines for the submission of material are:

Fall issue: September 15
Winter issue: December 15
Spring issue: April 15

The Michigan Reading Journal will be furnished to the members of the MRA and to the libraries of colleges and universities throughout the state. Every effort will be made to provide a balanced content, so that each issue will contain articles of interest for every reader.

With the continued support of both the membership and the executive board of the MRA, the Journal can grow into a truly professional publication. The comments and criticisms of reading teachers at all levels can make an important contribution toward that goal.
