BIBLIOGRAPHY
2015
The 2016 Author Recognition Reception celebrates faculty and staff members at Grand Valley State University who, in 2015, published scholarly and creative works — conference proceedings, journal articles, media, monographs, chapters, poems, fiction, creative nonfiction, and visual and performing arts. These works reflect well on their authors and creators and, in turn, on the university. Together, they embody a substantial contribution to the scholarly and creative interests of our community and the world.

Three Grand Valley authors are featured in this year’s bibliography — Rob Deaner from Psychology; Ayana Weekley from Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies; and Sok Kean Khoo from Cell and Molecular Biology. All active scholars, they tout the importance of extending the reach of their research by ensuring their scholarship is seen by as many people as possible. For two authors, publishing articles in open access (OA) journals and drawing support from the libraries’ Open Access Fund have been key factors in their success.

The libraries continue to advocate for broader access to Grand Valley scholarly and creative outputs through OA. ScholarWorks, our digital repository, hosts a range of items, from open access textbooks to peer-reviewed journals to masters’ theses. All copyrights remain in force, but the articles are free to read for anyone with an Internet connection. Last fall, the repository reached the 2,000,000 mark in number of items downloaded. One online journal in the repository accounted for over 500,000 downloads, and one of its articles was accessed more than 125,000 times. Another journal has had 350,000 downloads. Grand Valley’s masters’ theses have been accessed more than 200,000 times. Perhaps equally astonishing is the fact that persons from all but six nations in the world have downloaded and read Grand Valley scholarship since ScholarWorks’ inception in 2008.

Open access textbooks or open educational resources (OER) are the center of a national conversation that is gaining urgency as data accumulates, showing that too many students are unable to purchase expensive textbooks that increase college debt significantly. ScholarWorks currently hosts 10 OA textbooks, with the capacity to host many more. We’ve also developed a webpage to help faculty locate credible OER in most any discipline (libguides.gvsu.edu/oer). Your liaison librarian will be glad to help you explore these alternatives.

Congratulations, again, on your publishing accomplishments! It is our great pleasure to celebrate with you!

OPEN ACCESS PUBLISHING FUND 2015 RECIPIENTS

The Grand Valley State University Libraries are dedicated to supporting open access to scholarship. Through our Open Access Publishing Support Fund, we provide financial assistance, which enables GVSU researchers to publish in open access journals. The libraries will contribute up to $3,000 in open access publication fees for a GVSU author publishing in peer-reviewed journals that are fully open access or that offer an open access option.

Since the fund’s inception in 2012, we have seen significant growth in the number of applicants, which reflects changing patterns in scholarly publishing and growing interest among GVSU researchers in disseminating their work more widely. Fund recipients have commented, “Our work was highly and widely read and received more media attention than any other paper I’ve published,” and “the article is in the top 20 viewed on the journal’s website, which means many people are benefiting from the research.”

In 2015, we had 30 successful applicants from departments throughout Grand Valley who used the fund to help their scholarship reach a global audience. These authors’ publications have been viewed and downloaded hundreds of times, according to the journals’ own records — one exceeded 100 full-text downloads in only 40 days. The libraries are proud to recognize the following authors for their commitment to sharing their research with the world and look forward to continuing our support of open access publishing at GVSU.

Ayana Weekley, assistant professor of women, gender, and sexuality studies, has taught at Grand Valley since 2010, including a section of WGS 200 Introduction to Women and Gender Studies course for the Oliver Wilson Freshman Academy. The Freshman Academy is a comprehensive academic support program for students at Grand Valley that works to increase retention and promote academic performance.

Weekley’s research interests include race, gender, and the HIV/AIDS epidemic; black feminist studies; and periodical studies. She is a co-editor for the forthcoming Routledge anthology Women’s Magazines in Print and New Media that will include her work examining representations of race, gender, and HIV/AIDS in women’s magazines in the late 1980s, including Essence and Cosmopolitan.

Shifting her attention to the early 1970s, specifically 1970–1972, Weekley is currently researching the representation of African American women in Essence, Playboy, and Cosmopolitan during that time period. Amidst the black power and women’s liberation movements, Essence, a magazine geared toward upwardly mobile African American women building their careers, was founded; Playboy placed an African American woman on its cover for the first time; and Cosmopolitan attempted to capitalize on female sexuality by including male nude centerfolds. “I’m using those three magazines at this time period to think through how race, gender, and sexuality came together in relation to black women,” said Weekley, “and how black women negotiated all of those various representations of themselves in light of the civil rights and women’s movements.”

It’s not always easy for Weekley to access periodical articles from the ‘70s and ‘80s that are critical for her research, and University Libraries has been an indispensable resource for her. “Our library and the librarians here at Grand Valley are absolutely phenomenal,” Weekley said. “They have done an excellent job of helping me track down articles and getting the articles to me when local libraries or Grand Valley didn’t have what I needed. Their help has been essential for my research.”

Additionally, Weekley collaborates with the library on a regular basis to improve her courses, receiving help with teaching information literacy, discovering what’s working well (or not) in a lesson plan, and more. “At the previous two institutions, where I was either a student or a faculty member, I have never worked this closely with the librarian faculty,” Weekley said. “The Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies Department has a very close relationship with our librarian Mary O’Kelly. We have learned so much from her and other librarians about how to integrate information literacy into our classrooms, our assignments, and across our entire curriculum.”

Robert Deaner, associate professor of psychology, has researched sex differences in distance running performance and motivation since 2003. Recently, his work on pacing in marathons has generated public interest, including mentions in Runner’s World and The New York Times. “Men are about three times as likely as women to slow dramatically in the second half of a marathon, indicating that men are more likely to begin the race with an ambitious pace, whereas women are generally more conservative,” he said. “One strategy isn’t better than the other — they’re just different.”

Deaner is humble about the nonacademic origins of his research. “Just a classic research is me-search,” he said. “In the early 2000s, I took up distance running and some of my training partners were men and some were women. I was initially just trying to understand the patterns I observed in distance running, but my observations eventually led to a variety of research projects addressing sex differences in sports.”

Deaner enjoys studying such an accessible topic and appreciates having his academic publications discussed in academic and public forums.

“I’m not interested in studying something that only a few people care about,” he said, “so one test of whether my papers are successful is whether I can engage people in discussion.”

Deaner praised open access publishing as a crucial tool for publicizing his work. One of his articles is nearing 20,000 unique online views since 2012. “Anyone can engage in science,” he said. “If we want people to have a sophisticated dialogue, everyone needs access to the research, and open access journals allow that. Some open access journals also provide Q&A opportunities online, so the conversation is just starting when the article is published. It’s how science should be.”

Deaner applauded University Libraries for making open access publishing a reality for faculty members through the Open Access Publishing Fund, which he has used to publish four papers. The Open Access Publishing Fund provides money for paying publishing fees, which typically range from $1,000–$2,000. “It’s a great program that allows faculty to share their work more widely,” said Deaner.

MONOGRAPHS — CHAPTERS

FACULTY PROFILE: SOK KEAN KHOO

Sok Kean Khoo, a distinguished associate professor of molecular genomics, joined Grand Valley’s Department of Cell and Molecular Biology in 2013, after more than a decade of work at the Van Andel Institute. Her research focuses on developing clinical biomarkers for various diseases, especially for Parkinson’s disease, an interest earning her multiple grants from The Michael J. Fox Foundation for Parkinson’s Research. She was among nine researchers invited by the Fox Foundation to present a poster at the ninth annual Parkinson’s Disease Therapeutics Conference, the only scientific conference in the world focused exclusively on Parkinson’s disease drug development, which took place this past fall in New York City.

Currently, Khoo and her students are studying a group of small molecules called microRNAs in blood as biomarkers for Parkinson’s disease. Since Parkinson’s disease is very hard to detect at its early stage, most people have the disease for 10–15 years before they receive an accurate diagnosis. The goal of Khoo’s research is to find a set of biomarkers that will allow earlier diagnosis, as well as to discover whether these biomarkers will be able to track the disease’s development. “Unfortunately, there is no cure for Parkinson’s disease,” Khoo said, “but the earlier we can detect it, the more likely we will be able to stop or slow the progression of the disease.”

Khoo enumerated several reasons that emphasize the need for her work to be accessible to anyone interested. One reason is the prospect of collaboration. “If you are confident in your work,” Khoo stated, “then you should think positively about how open access publishing could strike a collaboration, rather than create competition.” Another is the need to receive external funding. “In order to get more funding,” Khoo explained, “people have to know your work and your credibility. ScholarWorks@GVSU brings a lot of visibility to my work and to the university.” This visibility is critical for receiving external funding for her own research, but Khoo is quick to note that external funding also supports her students and their research. “They get research experience in my lab,” she said, “as well as experience writing manuscripts to publish in peer-reviewed scientific journals. All of which makes them stand out in the very competitive field of getting a research position after graduation or enrolling in a graduate program.”

In addition to increasing the visibility of her work through ScholarWorks, University Libraries supports Khoo’s work when she needs help with her research. “I can ask questions to two very helpful librarians. I usually work with Valeria Long, liaison librarian in professional programs, who is located at the Frey Foundation Learning Center for Health Sciences right in my building (the Cook-DeVos Center for Health Sciences), as well as Barbara Harvey, liaison librarian in science, who is located in the Mary Idema Pew Library Learning and Information Commons.”
