6-22-2012

Massacre at Srebrenica

Kristina Pepelko
Grand Valley State University

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarworks.gvsu.edu/fishladder

Recommended Citation Available at: http://scholarworks.gvsu.edu/fishladder/vol10/iss1/33
Kristina Pepelko

Massacre at Srebrenica

Bosnia, July 1995

The Muslim boys lie on the ground like washed-up fish—faces pressed against the grass, hands tied behind their backs, legs squirming like tails as a round of gunfire slices into the hot summer air.
For now, it’s just a scare tactic—yet one boy in the sardine-packed group lies still as if he is already dead.
Letting the dry roadside lawn prick his soft, tanned skin, he closes his eyes remembering the smell of grilled trout and a different summertime when he sat in his backyard, plucking one green blade then another to the slow rhythm of “Kad ja podoh na Benbašu”— a song his mother hummed as she cooked that night’s special večera.
Soon, the gunfire slows to just one shot at a time.
Opening his eyes, he imagines reaching out to touch the grass blades with the tips of his fingers and reading them like braille with the hope they might tell him where is his mother is now.