Love Poem for a Narcissistic Twitter Feed

Liz Dalton
Grand Valley State University

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarworks.gvsu.edu/fishladder

Recommended Citation Available at: http://scholarworks.gvsu.edu/fishladder/vol11/iss1/11 Oh, you blessed release!
Every thought I’ve ever had, every detail of my #firstworldproblems-ridden day can be told to all 115 of my devoted disciples.
No longer are the days when I must wonder what @xSTACHx thinks about #TheWalkingDead or girls on the internet. I can tell the world yes, all the world, that hot chocolate is the #bestdrinkever and that @ZooeyDeschanel is flawless as Jovie in Elf, as I sit alone watching Christmas movies in October before it’s socially acceptable. But you accept me and my request to follow your every move—every breath and complaint and opinion.
You proclaim my woes and provide a platform for my public one-sided debates! You help me follow all the latest #trends and all my favorite celebrities because they’re people just like me and live lives just like mine and like putting cinnamon on their toast just like I like putting cinnamon on my toast and hey doesn’t that just make us practically the same person?
Oh, my darling Twitter account, you just get me like no one else I’ve ever poured my soul out to, and you provide me with such useful insights about all my favorite friends and strangers.
Without you, I would have never known that @CircaShawn put the #justice back in #fizzbitch or that @AKARhyDefine just drove through a bird cloud.
And when I’m blue and feel like posting a #sadtweet about how I’m #foreveralone you’re always there day or night to inform everyone who is awake just like me that they have (1) New Tweet and that (1) New Tweet will quickly turn into (17) New Tweets as I go on my Twitter Rampage about how much the world and everyone in it is personally out to get me and they could never understand how I feel. At least not like you.
But if I don’t get an @reply to any of my near-genius revelations I can surely come up with one that will, because the value my self-worth is directly related to the number of retweets I can get in a day.
And after all, @MadiShane is right: “The Gist of Twitter: “Give me validation or give me death.” – Humankind” which is just #sotrue to #mylife and you can’t just make that stuff up.