I colored slightly thinking how childish it because at the time your brother was a creep so as you are now and I couldn't stand across the road from Grandpa and I figured myself and be able to do whatever I wanted all brother showed up and threw a monkey wrench into now he was. He was always bouncing around wanting to do this and that and the other and it so I decided to get back at him whenever spend as little time with him as possible his hideout in the barn. Boy, was he mad. for being such a jerk. Then after he messed I just had to do something to get back at him pet frogs to the fence. Now are you I guess I satisfied her curiosity because find the rest of the party and as I rounded ran smack into none other than Jon. We drew grimly lopsidedly, and rather sheepishly knowing that perhaps sometime in the future, truly be in the past.

"THE CURTAIN NEVER ENDS THE SHOW..."

Think not of times when we had fun Think only of the summer sun.
For it is far for me to shine
And even harder to define...

Our light dims not into the dark It's only noon within the arc.
In days to come we will grow old
The fire goes out, we get cold...

But do not fear the setting sun
It sets for all and waits for none.
And you will see that I am right
We must begin while it is light...

Many will wait until the end
When light and darkness start to blend.
For they see not with their own sight
Not even in the noonday light...

But if you start when it is day
When darkness comes the light still stay.
And all through night the light will glow
The curtain never ends the show...
